

News Markets ▾ Quotes Portfolio Budget 2015 Money Property Focus ▾ Small Business ▾ Executive Style Compare & Save ▾ Events

Today's News Comment World Business Mining Banking & Finance The Economy Aviation Energy Media Workplace Retail CBD

You are here: Home > Business > Energy >

Search here...

Business ▾

Search

'We need a miracle': Bill Gates Q&A on climate change

February 23, 2016

☆ Read later

Ashlee Vance

Tweet

Share

43

Share

12

Share

Pin it

submit

Email article

Print

Bill Gates believes teenagers are the world's best chance of solving its energy issues. Photo: Nati Hamik

All we need is an energy miracle. No pressure, kids.

So came the call from Bill Gates on Monday with the release of his annual letter. It tackles heady subjects with the billionaire's usual optimistically sober tone. Unlike letters past, Gates aimed this year's missive at teenagers instead of adults, arguing they're our best shot at solving the world's energy crisis.

The genesis of the note was a conversation the Microsoft co-founder and his wife Melinda had with a group of high school students in Kentucky. The students wanted to know what cereals the Gates family preferred and if Bill knows how to dance the Nae Nae. They also wanted to know

"All we need is an energy miracle. No pressure, kids."
SMH, Feb 23, 2016